

General data bank needed,
JISC suggests

The UK would benefit from the creation of a Research Data Service to fill gaps in data management left by the lack of suitable subject or institutional repositories, says a Joint Information Systems Committee study, which interviewed some 700 researchers at four universities. "If we can't create subject repositories in all disciplines, we need a horizontal vision across institutional and disciplinary repositories," said Malcolm Read, secretary of the JISC.